AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSES

144. Failure to Mitigate. Each of Wickfire’s claims would be limited, if not fully barred, by its failure to mitigate damages. Under Texas law, a party seeking damages has a duty to mitigate those damages, provided that it can do so with “trifling expense or reasonable exertions.” Great American Insurance Co. v. North Austin Municipal Utility No. 1, 908 S.W.2d 415, 426 (Tex. 1995). Wickfire appears to allege that (a) Wickfire contracted with certain third parties; (b) under the contracts, Wickfire was to post onto to the Internet certain text that, that when clicked, would link to a website maintained by Wickfire; (c) TriMax posted onto the Internet certain text that appeared to the third parties to be from Wickfire & was in breach of the contract; and (d) even if those were all true facts, and even if those facts were violated the law and were causing Wickfire to suffer damages, upon information and belief, Wickfire failed to make the trifling expense and reasonable exertion to mitigate damages. Any alleged damages that occurred because of Wickfire’s failure to mitigate are not compensable as a matter of law.

145. Fair Use. Wickfire’s claims under the Lanham Act, and related claims, are barred by the doctrine of fair use. Even if TriMax had posted text on the Internet to which Wickfire maintains ownership rights, nothing about that posting would make the protected text somehow less valuable or affect Wickfire’s economic interest in the copied text. Furthermore, any “use” by TriMax of Wickfire’s name, mark, or brand by linking to Wickfire’s website would be a normative or collateral fair use of the text. Indeed, there would not be any consumer confusion of whose website contained Wickfire’s name, mark, or brand—because Wickfire, itself, maintained the website.
146. Privilege, Justification, and Excuse. Wickfire’s claims involving alleged tortious interference and such related claims are barred by the doctrines of privilege, justification, and excuse. Even if TriMax had posted text on the Internet and links to Wickfire’s website, TriMax would have been engaging in a bona fide exercise of its own rights to the Internet. Furthermore, TriMax has an equal right, along with anyone else, to post on the Internet. And in fact, even if TriMax had done the posting that Wickfire claims, TriMax would have a superior right to that material.
147. Laches. Each of Wickfire’s claims should be barred by laches. Even if TriMax had posted text on the Internet the text and links to Wickfire’s website, Wickfire unreasonably delayed in asserting claims, intent on allowing TriMax to believe that Wickfire did not object to the alleged conduct, and thereby suggesting through omission, that TriMax continue to do this conduct. If what Wickfire alleges were actually true, it should have immediately sought to enjoin the alleged conduct, rather than lying behind the log.
148. Proportionate Responsibility. Each of Wickfire’s claims should be barred under the doctrine of proportionate responsibility. Wickfire maintained the website “theCoupon.co”, and Wickfire failed to modify or deactivate the website. Furthermore, Wickfire engaged in a host of illegal an actionable conduct set forth in the counterclaims herein and incorporated into this defense by reference. Accordingly, any alleged damaged suffered by Wickfire was more than fifty percent caused by Wickfire, itself and/or third-parties (including some that upon information and belief, are affiliated with Wickfire). Thus, Wickfire is barred from recovery.

149. Ratification and Waiver. Each of Wickfire's claims should be barred under the doctrine of ratification and waiver. Wickfire maintained the website "theCoupon.co", and Wickfire failed to modify or deactivate the website. Furthermore, Wickfire engaged in a host of illegal and actionable conduct set forth in the counterclaims herein and incorporated into this defense by reference. Wickfire, through both its own illegal conduct, as well as its failure to bring claims previously, viewed itself as a competitor of TriMax, and that the competitors were "playing hardball." Even if they were competitors, and even if TriMax had done the alleged conduct, Wickfire certainly ratified it through its acts and omissions and waived any legal claims.
150. Setoff and Recoupment. Each of Wickfire's claims should be subject to setoff and recoupment. As set forth in its counterclaims, TriMax has suffered greatly at the hands of Wickfire. Thus, even if the same could be said the other way around, and even if Wickfire can be said to have suffered in a manner greater than TriMax, Wickfire's damages would still necessarily be reduced by the amount of those damages it caused to TriMax.
151. Assumption of Relief. Each of Wickfire's claims is barred by an express assumption of relief. Upon information and belief, by contracts Wickfire entered into with Internet providers, website managers, customers, and/or other third parties, as well as through Wickfire's actual knowledge and sophistication with respect to the Internet, Wickfire knew that by maintaining an Internet website, it assumed the risk of others linking to the Internet website. That happens all of the time. If it did not wish to have Internet text linked to something containing Wickfire's mark, brand, or language, it should have not maintained the website or made the website private or otherwise restricted.

152. Unclean Hands. Each of Wickfire's claims brought in equity are barred by the doctrine unclean hands. Wickfire engaged in a host of illegal and actionable conduct set forth in the counterclaims herein and incorporated into this defense by reference. Wickfire's conduct caused serious harm to TriMax, and the harm caused by Wickfire cannot be corrected without applying this doctrine.
153. Estoppel. Wickfire's claim of defamation is barred because, even if TriMax made the alleged statements, those would be the same statements that Wickfire previously made. If the statements are true, then the statements cannot be defamation. If the statements are false, then Wickfire is estopped from claiming that TriMax's alleged repeat of false statements already made by Wickfire defamed Wickfire. That would be like claiming that one defamed himself. Arguing: "you can't say that about me—only I can say that about me," is not the basis of a claim when that one did, in fact, say that about oneself.
154. Libel-Proof Plaintiff. Wickfire's claim of defamation is also barred because Wickfire is a "libel-proof" plaintiff. If the third parties who allegedly stopped doing business with Wickfire did so due to Wickfire's own poor reputation based on its own illegal acts, then Wickfire cannot claim that TriMax is to blame for either Wickfire's ruined reputation or its lost business opportunities. Under this defense, it is not enough to show that Wickfire lost business, or that Wickfire lost business due to its poor reputation. It must show that it lost business due to the poor reputation created by the alleged TriMax's acts. Such alleged acts, however, would not have been the cause of the lost business. Wickfire created a bad reputation through its own business tactics, including but not limited to those asserted in TriMax's counterclaims, which is incorporated into this defense by reference.

155. Opinion. Wickfire's claims are incredibly vague, but to the extent that its claim of defamation derives from opinions given by TriMax, Wickfire cannot recover.
156. Public Domain. Wickfire's claim of misappropriation and any other claims arising out of the allegations that TriMax appropriated and used Wickfire's advertisements is barred because such advertisements were readily ascertainable. If a party puts something out into the public, and if the party does not have intellectual-property rights to it, then it is public domain.
157. Absence of Competitor. Wickfire's claims of unfair competition are barred because Wickfire and TriMax are not in competition with each other. The differences in their respective lines of business demonstrate that they are certainly not in direct competition. For example, Wickfire alleges that internet users were detoured to website maintained by Wickfire. That Wickfire website involves a couponing business in which TriMax is not involved. Thus, not being in direct competition with each, TriMax would be entitled to lawfully commit various acts that—if they were competitors—would be “unfair.” In other words, TriMax and Wickfire are not direct competitors, and therefore TriMax cannot be liable for the alleged conduct.
158. Failure to Comply with Defamation Mitigation Act. Wickfire's claim for defamation is barred by Wickfire's failure to comply with the Defamation Mitigation Act, TEX. CIV. PRAC. & REM. CODE § 73.055(a).
